CONFIDENTIAL

Dear [redacted]

25X1

The Foreign Missions Act (Public Law 97-241, enacted on August 24, 1982) requires the establishment of an Office of Foreign Missions in the Department of State. The office will be charged with obtaining reciprocity between United States embassies and other U.S. Government offices abroad and those of foreign governments in the United States, as well as ensuring that national security interests of the United States are protected. The scope of this office is intended to give the U.S. Government regulatory control, heretofore nonexistent, over activities of foreign missions in the United States.

President Reagan in his August 24 statement emphasized the importance of both diplomatic and national security concerns: "S. 1193 also enacts into law the Foreign Missions Act, which provides authority to regulate the activities of foreign missions in our country, in order to promote reciprocity in our diplomatic relationships and to protect our national security."

The Department and the Intelligence Community agencies have attached high priority to the establishment and operation of this office. The Department is sending the enclosed letter (Attachment A) to the Congress on January 3, 1983, requesting their concurrence to reprogram $975,000 in operating expenses from State resources. This is in addition to the $140,000 the Department used in FY 1982 funds to initiate data base activities which can be used for the operation of the Office of Foreign Missions.

[redacted]
Director,
Intelligence Community Staff.

25X1

CONFIDENTIAL

DECL: OADR

L290

Since October 1, this Department has requested and received the complete cooperation of the Intelligence Community staff as well as representatives of the FBI, CIA, NSA, DIA, Air Force, Army, and Customs in planning and establishing the scope of the office. At all times, the Intelligence Community representatives have been an integral part of the decision process.

When the Office of Foreign Missions becomes fully operational, this Department will have initially six full-time employees assigned to that office as well as twenty other employees from the regional and functional bureaus performing daily liaison. Both the Department of Defense and the FBI are planning to have three employees assigned to the office while the CIA, NSA and Customs will initially have one or more employee(s) each. Office space is available for Intelligence Community staff members if you desire representation within the office.

The total cost of first-year operation of the Office of Foreign Missions is estimated at $2,090,000. The breakdown of obligations/expenses is at Attachment B. With the Department spending $1,115,000 from September 1982 through September 1983, the shortfall will be $975,000. Because the Congress has mandated and the President has emphasized that national security/counter-intelligence matters are specific concerns of the Office of Foreign Missions, the Department requests Intelligence Community funding for the office at the $975,000 level. Effective implementation of the Act will benefit each of the agencies and can not be accomplished without their financial support.

We would be pleased to meet with you and your staff to answer any questions. You may contact Walter F. Weiss at 632-1638 to arrange a meeting if desired.

Sincerely yours,

Jerome W. Van Gorkom

UNDER SECRETARY OF STATE
FOR MANAGEMENT
WASHINGTON

January 5, 1983

Dear Mr. Chairman:

The Foreign Missions Act (Public Law 97-241, enacted on August 24, 1982) requires the establishment of an Office of Foreign Missions in the Department of State. The Office will be charged with ensuring reciprocity between United States embassies and other U.S. government offices abroad and those of foreign governments in the United States, as well as ensuring that interests of the United States, including national security aspects, are protected. The scope of this Office is intended to give the U.S. government control, heretofore non-existent, that will insure equal treatment of our personnel and property abroad to that foreign government officials receive in this country.

The Department and other government agencies have attached high priority to fast establishment and operation of this office with the Department agreeing to reprogram 6 positions and $975,000 in salaries and operating expenses from State resources. Other agencies of the U.S. government will be providing additional contractual and funding resources in direct support of this Office.

Contract assistance will be needed to carry out different provisions of the Act which would not be cost effective if operated directly by the Department. This assistance will be accomplished both through general service contracts and intermittent contracts with specialists and experts in areas such as financial institutions, public utilities, commercial transportation, state and local tax authorities, regulatory, realty, planning and zoning, and others as needed.

The Honorable
Neal Smith, Chairman,
Subcommittee on Commerce, Justice,
State, the Judiciary,
Committee on Appropriations,
House of Representatives.

It is anticipated these funds will come from exchange rate gains. As required by Section 208(h) (3) of the Foreign Missions Act salaries and operating expenses for the Office of Foreign Missions will be transferred to the Department's Working Capital Fund.

I plan to insure the Committee is kept fully informed concerning the operations and programs of the Office of Foreign Missions, and the Department is prepared to respond to any additional questions or supply information you may require at this time.

Sincerely yours,

Honorable William J. Casey
Director of Central Intelligence
Washington, D.C. 20505

Dear Mr. Casey:

The Committee has no objection to the proposed Economy Act transfer outlined in your letter of February 14, 1983. The Committee desires, however, that it be notified as soon as decisions are made concerning fiscal year 1984 funding for the project.

With every good wish, I am

Sincerely yours,

EDWARD P. BOLAND
